In the meantime it may not be inappropriate to call the attention of the public to this subject, and consider some of the benefits which may be expected from these institutes.

Teachers' Institutes have been held in Massachusetts for more than a quarter of a century, originating in the fertile brain of Horace Mann, and have been productive of Great good. Teachers have come together the service of the water in those great good. Teachers have come together the last the recent cheese meeting at Hardwick.

We would have the Institutes hold short sessions—one day is better than more as farmers' time is precious—and only one subject should be discussed at one Institute, which should be opened by the Secretary, or a some other able lecturer.

MY METHOD OF USING MUCK. A correspondent of the Maine Farmer says: "I have for the past few years used several hundred loads of muck per year, in the various ways with good results. I usually haul it from the bog in the winter, where it has previously been shovelled into heaps while grading to set cranberry vines. In the wring following I compost it with the manure maye by my domestic animals during the winter, mixing it about equal parts, and sharelling it over once or twice during the summer. It is then ready for use. I find it a vasable fertilizer for corn, or any other field cap. I also use it as an absorbent in the values ways. I keep my hog sty well supplied with it, and also put it under the sink spout. When in Liverpool a short time ago, he was in company with one of the largest, importers of American cheese, and he had heard him make a remark which struck him tery much. "In early life," the gentleman said, "I was a large buyer of English cheese, and learn thing to the contrast between the said, "I was a large buyer of English cheese, and was really driven to given up that particular branch of trade by the great want of uniformity in the class of cheese I had to uniformity in the class of cheese I had to uniformity in the class of cheese in large quantities. But when, on the other hand, I turned my attention to the Americans, and became a large importer of Americans, and became a large importer of Americans produce, I found this advantage—that they possessed a very great share of persistent uniformity in the cheese they produced." If this system of co-operative cheese making shouldbring amongst them an improvement as to make, and a uniformity as to color and quantity of cheese, it would be the means of greatly benefiting the dairy farmers of this country. It became them who had an interest in this subject to deal with it. IMPORTED FOWLS. The Secretary of the New York State Poultry Society makes, in his report of the late poultry show, the following important statement concerning the longevity of imported fowls in this country:

Experience proves that fully one-third of all the fowls received from abroad die during the first six months after their arrival, regardless of the regime adopted for their care and treatment. In La Fleche and Creve Cœurs the ratio of mortality has been much greater thar. here stated, and in all varieties larger in males than females. Thus far we have been unable to secure any explanation of the immediate cause of their demise. Our cas-ual observation is, that the individuals remain, in appearance, in their usual health and appe-tite, until about a day before their dissolu-tion, when they will be reported to be drooping by the attendant. On examination they are found to be reduced, or wasted away to are found to be reduced, or wasted away to scarcely anything but feathers, skin and bones. And, although we have tried every remedy within our scope, none are in the alightest degree available. Death is sure to follow within twenty-four hours after the first drooping is discovered.

PRICES OF TROTTERS. The following are given as the estimated prices for trotting horses at the present day:

A horse that can trot in 2:45 will bring from $1,500 to $2,000; a dashing, good, young animal of square action will command $2,500 or $3,000, while a well bred one, say a Mesor $3,000, while a well bred one, asy a Messenger or a Bashaw, for instance, that can trot in 2:35, with a prospect of improvement, will be sought after at $5,000; and one of either of the above stock that can beat 2:30, is considered cheep at $10,000, while for every second in the twenties, $1,000 will be readily given.

There were gathered during the past aeason forty-one hundred tons of Sumse in Virginia; it brought $82,000.
